

The T-Bird

The T-33 originated as a variation of the F-80 fighter. It is capable of speeds in excess of 500 mph and features a pressurized cabin, dual controls and ejection seats.

Manufactured by Lockheed, it was used by the US Air Force for pilot training until 1990 and is still actively used in Canada. The Canadian version features a slightly different cockpit configuration than its American counterpart.

The T-33 is known for its incredible gliding ability. And, as one T-33 pilot explains, "it climbs like a homesick angel!"

The Museum

Founded in 1957 with six airplanes, the Planes of Fame Museum at Chino Airport now features 150 aircraft, including the world's largest collection of Japanese planes.

Approximately 30 of the museum's aircraft are in flying condition. Flights are available only to museum members and on an extremely limited basis.

The museum's aircraft often perform in airshows and appear in many movies and TV shows.

Individual flight membership plans are offered, as well as a variety of multi-flight packages.
